STAT

The Guardian has opened a full time news and business bureau in Washington, D.C.

The major task of the new bureau, staffed by Lee Webb and Marilyn Webb, will be to provide reportage and analysis about the federal government and movement news about the Washington metropolitan area.

In addition, the bureau will handle circulation, advertising and related business matters in the capital area.

Address of the bureau is 1945 Calvert St. N.W. Room 32; telephone (202) 387-6436.

Lee Webb is a former national secretary of SDS. He was coordinator of the Vietnam Summer project and, until recently, was Washington editor of Ramparts magazine. Marilyn Webb is a movement activist who has been engaged in community and teacher organizing and is now involved in the women's liberation movement.

The Guardian has established a special fund to help defer costs of the new bureau. Contributions earmarked to sustain this effort may be sent to the Guardian at 197 E. 4th St., New York, N.Y. 10009.

Washingtonians interested in developing news coverage of the capital or able to contribute toward building area circulation should contact the bureau at the Washington address.
